Daughters' Lives Unhappy.

Following the death of their father the five daughters married in quick succession. Princess Carolina fell in love with a member of the bourgeoisle, but her relatives, to save her from ignominy, arranged a match with Grand Duke Wilhelm Ernest of Saxe-Weimar. The marriage was unhappy from the first, and the Princess confided to her sisters that she wanted to run away.

Hermine, though only 18, took up the task of peacemaker, effecting a reconcillation one Christmas, but a month later Carolina died. The Grand Duke fell in love with the intercessor and proposed marriage. Hermine consented on one condition—the dismissal of the Duke's majordomo, who was a stickler for etiquette, which, the Princess and her court could not tolerate. It was said that the majordomo was an illegitimate son of the Duke's father. At any rate, he refused the Princess's request, and the match fell through.

The Frenchman is confident that he will succeed, and will leave from the French coast in a machine equipped with a two horse-power motor to aid him if necessary in reaching proper air currents, though he expects that the machine, which is reported to be extremely light and easily handled, will not need the engine at all. The interest of French airplane factories now centers on gliders. Tests are made with special fabrics and frame material, while a school is being opened where experts can study air currents. Almost daily for long hours numerous kites can be seen flying from factories. They are sent up by manufacturers, and their evolutions are watched closely by the pupils of the air currents school.

The army also is interested in motorless aviation not only as a means of teaching beginners the art of flying but it is thought also that the gliders will be extremely useful as a complement to the fighting machines which now exist.

A campaign has been started by French newspapers for 250,000 francs in prizes to be offered for various motorless airplane competitions. Some, it is singested, should be offered for the longest flight, others for altitude and still others for point to point flights.

He refused to divulge under what circumstances the revelations were made, saying that none but the elect were permitted to know. When asked what form he expected the ruin of Europe to take his answer was vague.

"We cannot penetrate the detailed designs of the Almighty," he said. "It may be that fire will devour the land. It may be that the Soviet Beast will overrun Europe and compel all men to bow their knees to its abominations."

Ten minutes after the interview Swirlbul, one of the leaders, was arrested by the Latvian police charged with fraud, and his colleague, Michael Lahz, also was caught. The police declare that they have been holding socalled religious meetings and preaching these doctrines in order to persuade people to sell their goods and emigrate. An accomplice, it is alleged, bought up the goods and houses at panic prices, while Swirlbul and Lahz drew a fat commission from some Brazilian immigration agency.

Reports from the liberated departments of northern and eastern France show that the proposed visit of ten German industrial magnates, including Hugo Stinnes, to the devastated regions is meeting with the disfavor of the population. The people want to know first who invited the Germans to visit the districts which their armies so completely demolished, and secondly, what good can result from such a visit?
